Background...

When it comes to managing commercial property, maintenance should always be a top priority. Whether you're an owner or a property manager, regular upkeep can make all the difference in maintaining property value and attracting satisfied tenants with their space.

The value of your commercial property is directly tied to its condition and aesthetic appeal. Neglecting maintenance can lead to deterioration and property damage over time, ultimately decreasing its value. By investing in regular maintenance, you can preserve its condition and prevent costly repairs.

Project Details:

The project called for extensive remedial repairs, and coatings to provide optimal protection against the environments.

Substrates were pressure washed to remove all surface contaminants, including fungal growth on the roof domes. Once all contaminants had been removed and surfaces were dry, a full primer coat had to be applied on all substrates to prevent chalkiness as well as providing a good key for the new coatings.

Products Specified:

Independent of the type of coating project, a properly prepared specification is a key component to its success. A coatings specification describes the project and the objective of the coating system. It also describes the surface preparation requirements, materials required to complete the work, the intended appearance of the completed work, and lists the inspection check points to help assure that the work is done according to the specification.
